

Write a Data Diary

Sometimes when you do things, information about you is recorded. Like the breadcrumbs in the Hansel and Gretel story, this “data” can be used to learn about you, or track you down. For one day, write down every type of data that you think is recorded by someone. Pay attention to everything you do and think about any data traces you might be leaving behind. Bring your filled-in diary back to class so we can talk about it.

Chatting with People

Apps often save data about all your activity. Which apps did you use?

Moving Around Town

Using a credit card, T pass or library card creates data and security cameras track your location. Where did you go and what did you do?

Getting Online

Games and websites log your activity. What did you do online?

Other Things

What other data breadcrumbs did you leave behind during your day?
